Catalog Description

An introduction to the central and enduring philosophical problems and the arguments historical and contemporary philosophers have made about them. Topics to be addressed include epistemology; metaphysics; the relation between the mind and the body; the nature of free will; the existence of God; the foundations of morality; aesthetics; and justice. Emphasis is on using methods of philosophic inquiry to develop and defend individual responses to perennial questions.

Course Student Learning Outcomes

1. Apply the methods of philosophical inquiry to philosophical questions.
2. Evaluate the theories and arguments of major philosophers in response to central and enduring philosophical questions.

Accessibility

College of the Redwoods is committed to making reasonable accommodations for qualified students with disabilities. If you have a disability or believe you might benefit from disability-related services and accommodations, please contact your instructor or Disability Services and Programs for Students (DSPS). Students may make requests for alternative media by contacting DSPS based on their campus location:

- Eureka: 707-476-4280, student services building, 1st floor
- Del Norte: 707-465-2324, main building near library
- Klamath-Trinity: 530-625-4821 Ext 103

If you are taking online classes DSPS will email approved accommodations for distance education classes to your instructor. In the case of face-to-face instruction, please present your written accommodation request to your instructor at least one week before the needed accommodation so that necessary arrangements can be made. Last minute arrangements or post-test adjustments usually cannot be accommodated.

Student Support

Good information and clear communication about your needs will help you be successful. Please let your instructor know about any specific challenges or technology limitations that might affect your participation in class. College of the Redwoods wants every student to be successful.

Evaluation & Grading Policy Online

In-class Work: 20%

Quizzes: 20%*

Online Discussion Participation: 20%

Midterm (Exam): 20%

Final (Exam + Essay): 20%

*Any in-class work that you turn in gets you an automatic 100%.

The quizzes will be open-book and taken online at your own leisure. Each quiz will be up for a week. You can take a quiz a second time if desired, and the highest grade will automatically be recorded.

Discussion participation will also get you a guaranteed 100%, provided you do the following each week:

- (1) Post a substantive answer to the discussion prompt (it has to be obvious that you read the assigned reading and that you really thought about the topic).

- (2) Post at least one thoughtful reply to a peer's post. You should always stick to the issue and the arguments, and never stoop to personal attacks.
- (3) Reply to me if I respond to your post.
- (4) Complete (1) and (2) within a week of the Discussion prompt appearing on Canvas.

Please note: Late work will be assessed on a case-by-case basis.

Introduction to the Course

Required Text: Reality+ (David Chalmers)

So what is philosophy? Ironically, that is itself a philosophical question, and different answers have been proposed by philosophers throughout the centuries. A traditional answer is that philosophy is the search for knowledge about the world and our place in it. In other words, philosophers want to know what reality is really like. That answer does make some sense, if you look at the questions that philosophers have asked. Here is a short, arbitrary list of just some of the questions that philosophers have grappled with:

- (1) What is everything made of?
- (2) What is the nature of time?
- (3) Does God exist?
- (4) Are numbers objectively real?
- (5) How should I live my life?
- (6) What is the relationship between the mind and the body/brain?
- (7) If everything has a cause, do we have free will?
- (8) What is truth?
- (9) Do colors exist in reality, or just in a person's perception?
- (10) Why is there something rather than nothing?

Based on just this list, you could see why the philosopher Wilfrid Sellars (1912–89) defined philosophy like this:

“The aim of philosophy, abstractly formulated, is to understand how things in the broadest possible sense of the term hang together in the broadest possible of the term.”

You can see that these are deep (and sometimes weird) questions, and it's not clear that any of the “hard” sciences (physics, chemistry, biology, astronomy, etc.) are completely equipped to deal with them. Typically, philosophers try to answer these questions by thinking very hard about them, and hopefully checking to make sure that no logical mistakes are being made when coming up with potential answers. The philosopher Socrates said that philosophers should “follow the good arguments wherever they lead.” And, yes, sometimes good arguments can lead to conclusions that you might not like. We will talk in class about what we mean by a “good argument.” But the important thing to know right off the bat, is that philosophers value things like intellectual honesty, clear thinking, evidence-based reasoning, and a fearless commitment to finding out the truth about the world and our place in it, no matter how unsettling the answers might be. If you are going to stay enrolled in the class, you will have to adopt these values as well, at least in the context of this class. We will go into great depth discussing difficult topics such as God, death, morality, and free will.

On a side note: I should mention that, while I am happy to talk about my own views about all these questions, you will never be asked to agree with my ideas. I will not try to convert you to my point of view on any of the issues we will be discussing. We will be studying different possible answers to these philosophical questions, and the various arguments for those positions. If you come to any conclusions about any of the issues under discussion, then you should do that because you were convinced by good arguments, not “because I said so.”

Here's what you should be able to demonstrate by the end of the course:

- (1) The ability to discuss some of the major topics that have been addressed by philosophers (from epistemology to metaphysics to ethics).
- (2) The ability to analyze and evaluate philosophical arguments.
- (3) The ability to put into practice the intellectual values found in the philosophical tradition.
- (4) The ability (and hopefully desire) to begin your own journey of philosophical discovery.

Academic dishonesty

In the academic community, the high value placed on truth implies a corresponding intolerance of scholastic dishonesty. In cases involving academic dishonesty, determination of the grade and of the student's status in the course is left primarily to the discretion of the faculty member. In such cases, where the instructor determines that a student has demonstrated academic dishonesty, the student may receive a failing grade for the assignment and/or exam and may be reported to the Chief Student Services Officer or designee. The Student Code of Conduct (AP 5500) is available on the College of the Redwoods website. Additional information about the rights and responsibilities of students, Board policies, and administrative procedures is located in the College Catalog and on the College of the Redwoods website.

Disruptive behavior

Student behavior or speech that disrupts the instructional setting will not be tolerated. Disruptive conduct may include, but is not limited to: unwarranted interruptions; failure to adhere to instructor's directions; vulgar or obscene language; slurs or other forms of intimidation; and physically or verbally abusive behavior. In such cases where the instructor determines that a student has disrupted the educational process, a disruptive student may be temporarily removed from class. In addition, the student may be reported to the Chief Student Services Officer or designee. The Student Code of Conduct (AP 5500) is available on the College of the Redwoods website. Additional information about the rights and responsibilities of students, Board policies, and administrative procedures is located in the College Catalog and on the College of the Redwoods website.

Inclusive Language in the Classroom

College of the Redwoods aspires to create a learning environment in which all people feel comfortable in contributing their perspectives to classroom discussions. It therefore encourages instructors and students to use language that is inclusive and respectful.

Setting Your Preferred Name in Canvas
